

Great Gamble on the Mekong (38 mins) HDTV

The mighty Mekong River is renowned for its rich diversity and it ranks as the world's most important river for freshwater fisheries. It provides food security for more than 60 million people in the heart of South East Asia.

This film looks at how a flurry of hydro dam building is threatening to destroy one of the world's greatest ecosystems vital to the health, nutrition and well-being of the riverine population.

Megadams on the Salween (30 mins) HDTV

Megadams on the Salween (Thanlwin) is a film about critical choices for the new government in Myanmar over what to do with Chinese megadam projects located in the northern and eastern ethnic states and how to solve acute energy problems in the country.

The Salween River descends from Tibet through Yunnan, enters northern Myanmar and flows through the territories of the Shan, Karenni, Karen and Mon States. The dam sites are located close to war zones amidst a faltering peace process as the Burmese army continues efforts to crush ethnic resistance.

Most of the estimated 6 million people in the area are fiercely opposed to any mega-projects that would force them to relocate from their ancestral lands and traditional livelihoods.
